The Classic Status Symbol (Private Entry Foyers) Make A Comeback in Condos

JANUARY 15, 2020 IN REAL ESTATE

The entry foyer that has been a status symbol of the rich in many historic homes is now making a grand return in today's luxury condominiums. In an age of openness and oversharing, ie. Instagram, Snapchat and Instagram, a number of designers and developers are helping buyers reclaim their privacy by reinventing and reintegrating this classic staple. From wood flooring medallions with a basket-weave motif, ash veneer panels, custom-designed concrete walls and more, this age-old concept is being reinterpreted today.

77 Greenwich

Located in the heart of Manhattan's "New Downtown," 77 Greenwich, a new luxury condominium with interiors by the renowned Deborah Berke Partners—the firm known for the interiors at the world's tallest residential building, 432 Park Avenue, boast's 90 residences that feature a distinct entry foyer/gallery space lined with ash veneer panels that guide residents to open kitchens and gracious living spaces. The foyer floors are sandblasted/brushed Bianco Mist Quartzite.
